COMMENTS FROM THE PORTFOLIO MANAGER

Inflation is out of control. But as they say in the Texas oil patch, the cure for higher prices is higher prices. And so, the liquidity drain continues, the tide keeps pulling out and until prices relax, every castle is made of sand. June 2022 closes its door on some of the most vicious half year returns in 80 years: commodities are +46%, their strongest rally since 1946, while GDP-weighted global bonds dropped -15.4% so far in 2022, a drop unseen since WW2 as well. If we push our luck, annualizing these bond returns would set us back to the worst sell-off since the US Civil War in 1865. People have noticed. The Univ. of Michigan Consumer Confidence Index is at its lowest point since its creation in 1978. UK, German and French surveys shed the same tears. The BofA global investor sentiment survey is at its most pessimistic low point in 20 years. Nasdaq tested a 35% drawdown on June 16. The mood so grim, how much worse can it get?

The range of possible outcomes this summer sits between worse case stagflation and plausible virtuous slowflation (1-2% growth with 4-5% inflation). Right now, the global consensus is for a shallow recession in 2H22, but uncertainty is high on peak inflation. A single month could make a world of difference. A lot could go wrong. With wholesale inventories surging, unsold goods piling up (Walmart, Target, Nike, Samsung, Zalando), retail energy prices still rising, mortgage rates up 2x in 6 months... most likely we are at the inflection point, and there lies our troubled hope. Our real worry now is earnings risk. Companies with commodity exposure have pricing power but cyclical downside, while those with inflationary input costs have margin risk. Not much room to hide, although in the last 10 days of June, the recession narrative relieved some of the pressure on global bonds, giving Software and Biotech some breathing room. With our focus on high FCF metrics, our core Software names performed well, with Snowflake +9.0% and CrowdStrike +5.4%; China EVs also had a very strong month, with Nio +24.9%, as well as Biotech with CRISPR +4.7% and Intellia +12.2%. But the energy and commodity pieces of our Clean Tech allocations suffered, with Schlumberger -22.2%, Core Labs -29.7% and Quimica Chile (lithium) -21.3%. Overall, the fund was down -8.9%.

With many Tech sectors like Software, New Media, e-Commerce, Biotech and Clean Tech trading in the vicinity of 10-year valuation lows, the market may be turning back to growth, but the risk of getting it wrong on inflation is just too high, keeping our allocations unchanged for now. As July earnings season unfolds, we expect to adjust our weightings. Our priority remains high FCF metrics which we stress test under a 10% revenue cut.
